Analysts at the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) have augmented their manpower to examine information gathered from the raid on the compound of Osama bin Laden one month ago, the chief intelligence officer at the Department of Homeland Security told a House panel Wednesday.

The DHS Office of Intelligence and Analysis (I&A) continues to examine that information and disseminate information to state and local agencies that could act on any of the intelligence within it, said Caryn Wagner, DHS undersecretary of intelligence and analysis.

"I am confident that we are getting the information that we need that needs to be shared with our state and local partners and our critical infrastructure partners. It has been going relatively smoothly, considering the volume of information," Wagner told the House Homeland Security Subcommittee on Counter-terrorism and Intelligence.
